SYNOPSIS

This ordinance establishes the Victoria Towers Historic District. The district is comprised of a single Queen Anne style residential building located along the Kirkwood Corridor, which links the downtown to the Sample Gates entrance to Indiana University. The Victoria Towers building is one of the few remaining residential structures representing an era of housing development of the late nineteenth century. The Bloomington Historic Preservation Commission has recommended this designation because of the historic and architectural character of the property and has classified it as "contributing." This property will be subject to the provisions found in Title 8 of the Bloomington Municipal Code, which are intended to preserve and protect the properties from demolition and also include review of exterior modification.
