The property at 209 South Dunn qualifies for local designation under the following highlighted criteria (2) f. and g. found in Ordinance 95-20 of the Municipal Code:

- (2) Architecturally worthy:
- a. Embodies distinguishing characteristics of an architectural or engineering type; or
  - b. Is the work of a designer whose individual work has significantly influenced the development of the community; or
  - c. Is the work of a designer of such prominence that such work gains its value from the designer's reputation; or
  - d. Contains elements of design, detail, materials, or craftsmanship which represent a significant innovation; or
  - e. Contains any architectural style, detail, or other element in danger of being lost; or
  - f. Owing to its unique location or physical characteristics, represents an established and familiar visual feature of a neighborhood or the city; or
  - g. Exemplifies the built environment in an era of history characterized by a distinctive architectural style.

The Gabled-Ell Style was the prevalent vernacular form in Monroe County from 1890 through 1914. The house at 209 South Dunn shows remarkable integrity of form through time and can be said to be in close-to-original condition on the exterior. The earliest available Sanborn Fire Insurance map showing the residence is dated 1898 and verifies that the property was in place. Its footprint is virtually unchanged since 1907. The original windows of the subject property are two-over-two lights with a characteristic long proportion indicating, along with the width of the muntins, the earlier date of construction. The Gabled-Ell Style dominates residential construction in Bloomington after 1900. This example is important in its integrity and its location next to the Fourth Street commercial corridor of adapted residential structures.

This early frame gabled-ell cottage faces South Dunn alongside an east-west running alley. It is adjacent to a locally designated historic limestone sidewalk on Dunn Street, the only sidewalk distinguished with local designation. The cottage is important in its architectural details; its front facing gable features a pedimented gable with plain boxed cornice and a plain wide frieze. Additional vertical elements add interest to the framing. The bay window, which faces South Dunn contains three windows, and is topped by a projecting cornice. The porch is supported by simple square piers with balusters of complementary design.

The house was occupied by numerous families through time, some associated with the University, some with the quarrying industry. In 1945 it came into the possession of the Eads family where it remained until 1984.

Because of the building's proximity to the Fourth Street restaurant corridor, it can be perceived as an important contributing element to this area, clearly linking campus with the established older housing nearby.
