He gave details pertaining to the dangerous animal section, the ban on feeding deer, enforcement, changes to fees, and habitual offender provisions.

Title 7 of the Bloomington Municipal
Code [7:15pm]

Volan asked about adoption fees and about monitoring a dangerous animal.

Council questions:

Sauder explained the fees which were based on type of animal and its age. He clarified how dangerous animals were monitored including signs, enclosures, and routine visits.

Volan asked who declared an animal dangerous.

Sauder said the ACC and Animal Care and Control staff would bring the information to the commission.

Volan asked if there was an appeal process for the declaration of an animal being dangerous.

Sauder said yes, and the animal's human could present information at an ACC meeting, and also in civil court.

Rollo asked if animals that were surrendered from outside Monroe County were from individuals or shelters.

Sauder said it was individuals, because the city shelter did not have room for animals from other shelters.

Rollo asked about nonlethal control of city deer, and about the need for a count. He asked about tick borne diseases.

Sauder agreed that counting deer was an ideal first step. He clarified that reducing the deer population did not coincide with tick populations. Tick borne diseases were monitored by the Monroe County Health Department.

Sims asked if the cost for monitoring dangerous animals was adequate.

Sauder said the actual cost was higher than the fee.

Sims asked about microchipping the dangerous animal for monitoring.

Sauder said the cost varied depending on who microchipped and that the individual was responsible for it.

Sims asked if removing animals went through the court process.

Sauder said that the first contact was with the owner and if there were problems, then a warrant would be issued.

Piedmont-Smith asked when the adoption fees last increased.

Sauder said it was around 2010 or 2012.

Rosenbarger asked for clarification on bird feeders being exempt and about feeding birds directly on the ground.

Sauder said it was an ongoing conversation and bird feed on the ground was excluded.

Smith asked if continual barking from dogs was addressed in the legislation.

Sauder said that there was a noise violation code in Title VII that included barking. He gave additional information.

Julie Gray spoke in favor of the ban on feeding deer and provided reasons.

Public comment:

Rosenbarger supported the legislation and looked forward to discussions on feeding wildlife on the ground.

Council comments:

Piedmont-Smith thanked ACC, Sauder, and staff for their work. She urged neighbors to talk to each other regarding concerns with feeding deer.

Rollo supported the legislation, and was concerned with deer population and tick borne diseases. Deer increased the risk of Lyme disease so it was important to count the number of deer. He commented on overgrazing by deer and land that might not recover.
