Domestic Violence in the Monroe County Legal System

This chart provides an abbreviated description of how a report is processed through the Monroe County legal system. While it is frequently more complex than what is shown here, it represents what happens in the Monroe County community (and this can vary greatly in other Indiana counties).

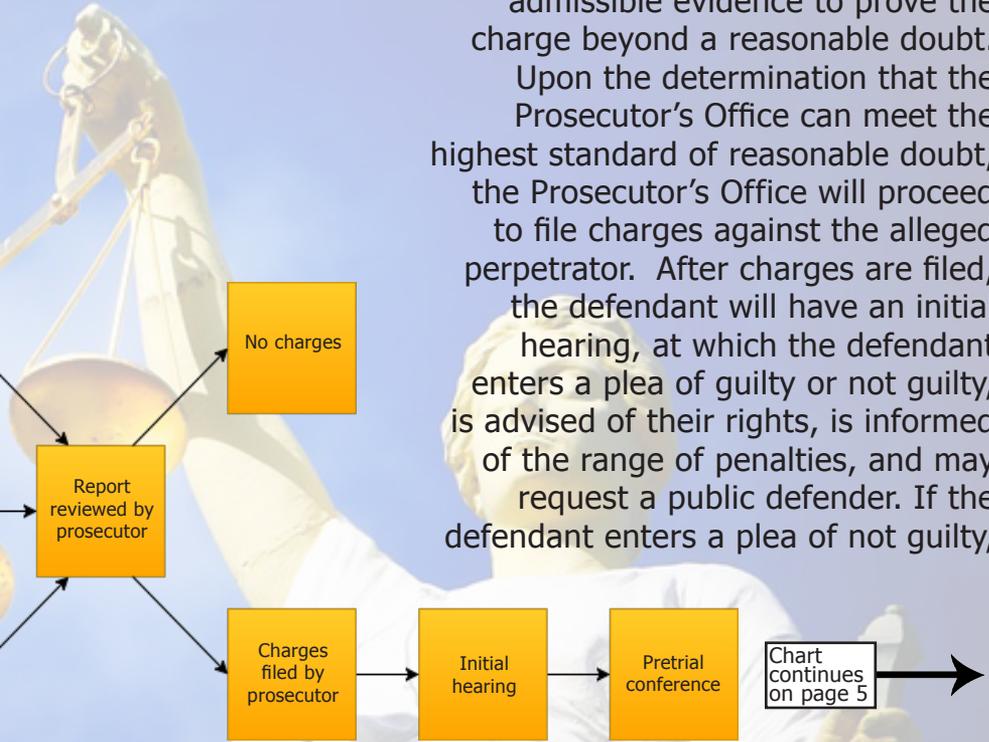

Investigating Agencies

There are multiple investigating agencies in Monroe County that first respond to a report of domestic violence, including the Bloomington Police Department, Monroe County Sheriff's Department, Ellettsville Police Department, Indiana University Police Department, and the Indiana State Police. Officers from these agencies investigate and then decide if they can establish probable cause that a crime has been committed.

Monroe County Prosecutor's Office

The Monroe County Prosecutor's Office reviews reports submitted by investigating agencies to determine if there is sufficient, credible, and admissible evidence to prove the charge beyond a reasonable doubt.

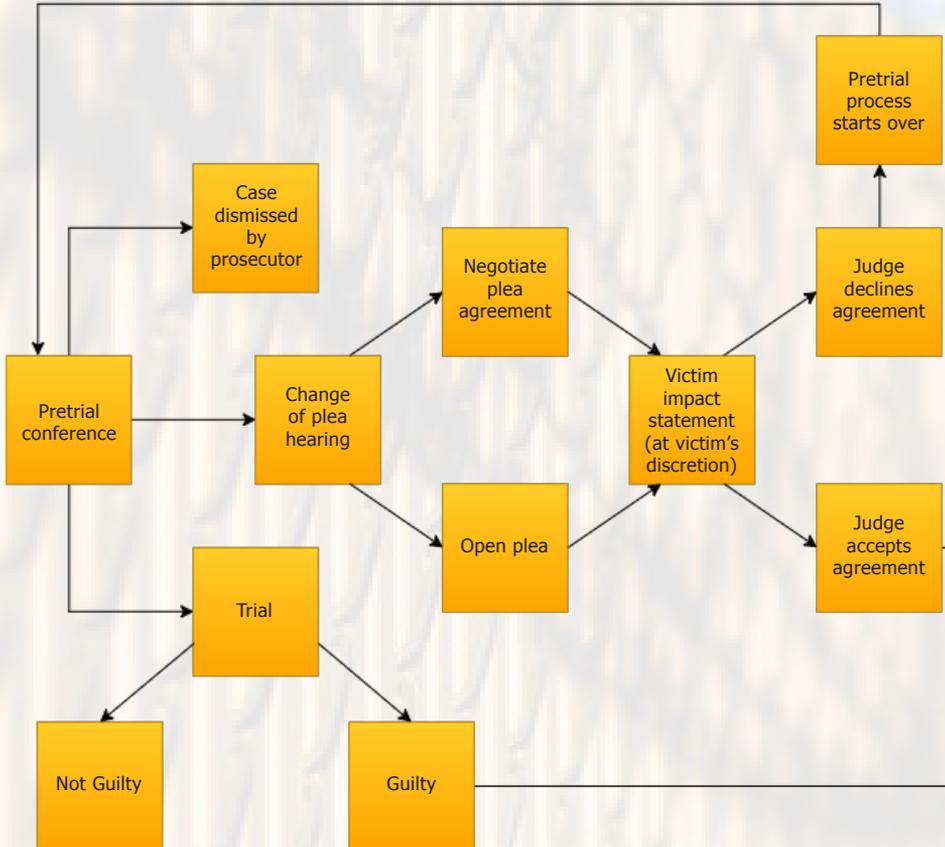

Upon the determination that the Prosecutor's Office can meet the highest standard of reasonable doubt, the Prosecutor's Office will proceed to file charges against the alleged perpetrator. After charges are filed, the defendant will have an initial hearing, at which the defendant enters a plea of guilty or not guilty, is advised of their rights, is informed of the range of penalties, and may request a public defender. If the defendant enters a plea of not guilty, the case will proceed to a pretrial conference—a meeting between the prosecutor, defendant, and defense attorney. Possible case resolutions are represented in the corresponding chart.

Community Supervision

The Department of Corrections oversees perpetrators in jail. The perpetrator can be released on parole or after their sentence has been fulfilled. If a perpetrator is sentenced to probation, they go directly to the Department of Probation following their sentencing hearing. The perpetrator will meet with an intake officer to collect general information and then meets with a violent offender officer who will personally oversee their case. The violent offender officer provides a plan that the perpetrator must complete before being released from probation. This plan may include mandatory counseling, anger management programs, rehabilitation programs for drug or alcohol use, budgeting exercises, and much more.

If the perpetrator ever violates probation, it is at the discretion of the violent offender officer to send the case back to trial. If the perpetrator fulfills their probation requirement, they are then released.

Incarceration

The terms "prison" and "jail" are often used interchangeably, but actually are very different. Jails are usually administered by local law enforcement, such as the County Sheriff's Department, or by local government. A jail is designed to confine people for short periods of time while they are serving a short sentence or awaiting trial. On the other hand, a prison is operated by the state government or the Federal Bureau of Prisons and is designed to house convicted criminals for much longer durations, including for life.
